Families struggle. Hectic schedules, tight budgets, demanding jobs, too little sleep, not enough time for conversation—well, the list could go on. And on. We live in a time and an environment where it is not easy to maintain a healthy family.

We were created to be in community; therefore, we have a deep desire to connect at intimate levels with other people, and yet we often find that those with whom we want to connect can be the ones who cause us the greatest grief. So what are we to do? A friend of mine used to say, "You can't live with them; you can't live without them!" Quite a quandary.

Today we begin a sermon series entitled, "Family: Living With The People We Can't Live Without." In this series, we are interested in considering how the Bible informs our living as family at the beginning of the 21st century. What does it offer us? In following what it says, can we achieve a greater degree of health in our families?

Each week on this page, I will suggest some further reading. Today our sermon addresses marriage. A book which is well worth the investment is entitled, A Lasting Promise: A Christian Guide to Fighting for Your Marriage, by Scott Stanley, Daniel Trathen, Savanna McCain and Milt Bryan. Another book worth your time is, Sacred Marriage, by Gary Thomas.

Don't forget the afternoon seminar (3:30 – 5 p.m., today) entitled, "What Makes Marriage Work," by Dr. William Loveless, in the Campus Chapel. It will place more tools in your hands for improving your marriage.

Yours for the best marriages God can give us!

Randy Roberts
Senior Pastor
